much formal dignity and rigid ceremony. The scene, however, was given from beginning to end. Rather than a series of striking tableaux, it is presented as a continuous drama. The first scene is the old French village, "An Song" in Dien Ya Ranch, put in Indian language, the rich male voices resounding in the open air. Next come the women of the same tribe, singing also without any regard to the different tribe following behind. The next scene is the scene of their own language, and so on with the four or five following. The procession keeps in constant movement in the little arena before the stage while the tableaux go on. It is, indeed, one of the most interesting and picturesque spectacles. Over 2,000 strong voices ring out with the ancient psalm hymns, each one directly upon the change of the tableaux. The small stage before them.

In the first tableau the setting is in the heart of the prairie. Christ Before Pilate. Pilate sits on a small platform, while Christ, bound with his hands, is led to him by two soldiers. The scene is in the heart of the prairie, and where the gorgeous valley of the Fraser River is a stage-setting to the scene. ### FIGHTS WITH INDIANS.

STORIES OF THE EARLY DAYS IN THE SOUTHWEST.

The Southern Indians Used Bows and Arrows for Weapons — Feats of the Great Sioux Horsemen.

COL. GILBERT'S STORIES.

Col. Charles C. Gilbert, United States Army, who retired from active service in 1870, is a considerable quantity and variety of the weapons, in the city. The Colonel served Uncle Sam in a military capacity for many years, and during those years saw a great deal of the war, having participated in the Mexican war and a great deal of the fighting of the frontier.

"I joined the army under Gen. Taylor as second lieutenant of the First Infantry at Monterey, and was with the troops that went to the siege of Vera Cruz, and continued with the regiment for many years, until transferred to another regiment upon the breaking out of the rebellion.

"It is commonly supposed," continues the Colonel, "that the Indians were extremely dangerous to the troops. This was not in the case of the Southern Indians, who in those days were armed with bows and arrows. They were not formidable opponents, as their arrows were not dangerous enough to strike the Indians, by the use of the bow and arrow, were accustomed to make a run on their horses toward the object, and when quite near to the object, could easily hold a bow and arrow, and then they would shoot.

"The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife.

"The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife.

"The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife.

"The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife. The Indians were not so much afraid of the bow and arrow as they were of the knife.
